Re: Fred Scott;

Called at undertaking establishment of W. H. Quackenboss & Son, 98-100 Albany St. where I interviewed Edward Gamble (employee), brother of deceased William Gamble, who was employed as bartender at "Stumpy" Gillen's road-house, French Street, during and covering period prior to and following year, 1900, in endeavor to learn if he knew names or addresses of any of former frequenters at Gillen's during time of brother William's employment there.

Said his brother Bill died 23 years ago; that any and all of the old timers who frequented Gillen's have since died with the exception of Jack Cornell, who is now confined to Catholic Home at Lawrenceville, N. J. Says Cowell, as was his brother Bill and Gillen, had been old time circus performers, and that Cowell personally knew each and every person who went to Gillen's in the old days.

Could give no information beyond the above.

Respectfully submitted,

Thomas L. Harrison.
